Acquiring the Surviving Software Market

Operational durability now determines which software companies survive.

Market Shift

Software consolidation is underway. The capital environment the market was built on no longer exists. That cycle has ended. The repricing has begun.

Recurring-revenue software businesses still retain durable customers and critical functionality — but they no longer possess the competence required to survive. Operational competence is the new scarce asset in software investing.

Our Strategy

We focus on acquiring and rehabilitating under optimized recurring-revenue software businesses through:

- Disciplined operational intervention
- Margin improvement
- Retention strengthening
- AI-enabled operational infrastructure
- Recurring cash-flow optimization

The Difference

We are not commercializing our systems. Our internal infrastructure exists to improve:

- Sourcing visibility
- Diligence speed
- Acquisition judgment
- Post-acquisition operational coordination
- Cross-portfolio operational intelligence

Why Prytaneum?

We are turnaround specialists: a very close-knit team of former CEOs, CROs, CIOs, and SVPs who have succeeded together for years inside software environments, delivering top-percentile profitability across B2B acquisitions.

We have built long-duration operational infrastructure for the software restructuring cycle now underway. It has been built around operationally constrained software environments.

Each acquisition strengthens the operational intelligence and pattern recognition underlying future acquisitions. We know AI will disproportionately advantage firms capable of operational coordination at scale.

We are intentionally selective about both acquisitions and LP relationships. This strategy requires long-duration alignment, operational discipline, and conviction around the restructuring cycle now unfolding across software.
